UNITED STATES MAIL.
STEAMER
MAINE.
POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
Washington, D. C., July 1869.
PROPOSALS will be received at the Contract Office of the Department until noon of P. M. Monday Sept. 13, 1869, to be decided by the 20th of the same month, for conveying the United States Mails on the following Routes, from the 1st day of October next, and for four years thereafter, under the act of March 3d, 1845, and the joint resolution of August 14, 1848, viz:
From Long Island, Me., to Bangor, Me., and back, once a week, leaving Long Island every Monday at 5 P. M., and arriving at Bangor by 5 P. M. the next day. Leave Bangor every Tuesday at 5 P. M., and arrive at Long Island by 5 P. M. the next day.
Time proposed, 24 hours each way.
Distance, 70 miles each way.
Proposals must be made out in conformity with the law and regulations of the Department, and should be addressed to the Second Assistant Postmaster General, and endorsed "Proposals for Mail Service in Maine."
Bidders are informed that the Department will require service to be performed with sufficient expedition, and in such vessels as will insure certainty and regularity in the trips, and the preservation of the mails from loss or injury by the dangers of the sea.
Bidders will state the price they ask per annum for the service proposed, distinguishing the sum for each trip.
Bids must be made in duplicate, and must be accompanied by the guarantee of two responsible persons, citizens of Maine, that the bidder will enter into the contract, if accepted, and perform the service in the manner required by the Department.
The Postmaster General reserves the right to reject any bid which he may consider too high for the service proposed.
No bid will be received after the hour named.
Blank forms of proposals, guarantee, and obligation to enter into contract, can be obtained on application at the Contract Office of the Department.
Each bid must be signed by the bidder in person, if he be present, or by his duly authorized agent, if he be absent.
Bidders will write their bids in the language following, to wit: "I hereby propose to perform the service of carrying the mails of the United States, on the Route No. 1 in Maine, from Long Island to Bangor, and back, for the sum of ——— dollars per annum, in accordance with the advertisement of the Second Assistant Postmaster General, dated July 28, 1869."
Aug 10 td JAMES W. MARSHALL, Postmaster General.

Politics in Aroostook.

We presume there has not been a more earnest, outspoken worker in the temperance cause in this State than Daniel Stickney, Esq., of the Presque Isle Sunrise. Temperance has been his particular work, scarcely second to the other great principles of Republicanism. We remember with what earnestness he came to Bangor to urge the nomination of his favorite, Mr. Perham, for Governor. But having been defeated in the Convention, he is not without hope, and he went home to fight the fight of a true Republican, in the ranks of his party. An attempt has been made to organize a Richborn wing in Aroostook county, headed by some disappointed aspirants and encouraged and cheered on by the Democracy. In the last issue of the Sunrise is a long article showing up the character of this bolt there. After giving an account of it, he thus forcibly states why the Republican party should not be sacrificed, and why the Good Templars are bolting their professions by entering upon political intrigue:

There are too many glorious memories, too many heroic achievements, too much historical renown, too many of the foot print of God, clustering around that party, for us to abandon it for "light and transient cause."

It is the party which, when the "sum of all villainies" was stalking through the land threatening to call the roll of its human chattels under the shadow of Bunker Hill, determined by fraud or force or, by any means which wicked men or devils could devise, to curse this broad continent with human servitude; boldly and defiantly and successfully resisted this stalking horse of hell, and its aggressions! Which carried the war into the enemies country, abolished forever slavery, and made this broad land in fact as well as in name the land of the free! Which has crushed the mightiest rebellion that the history of the world has to record, which crested a nation of millions for the only laudable purpose for which an army was ever created, and when it had accomplished its mission, returned it again to the walks of industry and peace, unentrammelled, with the vices and degeneracy of all former armies, which has brought order out of confusion, returned the rebel States to the Union, saved Republican institutions from total overthrow, and our nation from being a reproach and by word among the nations of the earth! This is the party which has done all that ever was done for temperance, politically, in this or any other State. It has enacted our prohibitory law, and so far as depends on political action, has done all that has ever been done for its enforcement. Who tell you, gentlemen, this party and the men who compose it have deserved the well of every patriot, have done too much for our beloved country, for us to abandon it because somebody who is not our choice is nominated for Governor, or because now and then some person gets into office whom we do not prefer.

We boldly and faithfully advocated the nomination of another man for Governor. We spent a week's time, and paid our expenses to the Convention at Bangor, and with 375 others threw our vote for Mr. Perham for a candidate for Governor, a gentleman whose temperance record is unimpeached and unimpeachable, who has been a lifelong laborer in the cause!

Over six hundred other delegates were in favor of the nomination of Gov. Chamberlain.

Having thus done our duty within the pale of of the party, spent time and money to do it, whilst every one of the men who now set up for a new party, were at home attending to their farms and their merchandise, we came home, and with clean hands and a clear conscience, adopt and practice another cardinal principle of republican institutions, "submit to the rule of the majority." We shall vote for Gov. Chamberlain, no matter who says to us it is our "DUTY" to do otherwise.

But really, gentlemen, what do you expect to accomplish for Temperance by this organization, especially as it originated in the lodge of Good Templars. Was not every member of the Order told when initiated that there is nothing in the organization to interfere with his political or religious opinions?

Will not some members at least be likely to remember this promise, and protest against their Lodge being made a political machine? This is the first time we have ever known Lodges of Good Templars, or Divisions of Sons of Temperance organizations as such, attempt to make nominations for candidates for political offices. The Convention which nominated Mr. Hobborn was not composed of "Good Templars," or "Sons of Temperance," but simply of "Temperance men," without any reference to whether they belonged to any temperance lodge or not. Among all the follies of temperance men and they certainly have not been few, this is the last, and it seems to us the greatest. We hazard nothing in predicting that the Aroostook County Lodge of "Good Templars" has had its last meeting.

The editor then goes on to expose the folly of the day that this is a move against the schemes of politicians, by giving an instance showing that nearly the whole strength of Hichborn's party in Aroostook is composed of ex-office-holders, of whom he says:—

Now these gentlemen of the Republican party have been among the leaders of the party for the last eight years, attending its Conventions, had their influence in shaping its policy, received its honors and emoluments down to the last year. If the party has gone wrong in any respect they certainly can't avoid their share of the responsibility. For them to make the charge is laughably absurd. It is like the clergyman who after ministering ten years to the people, told them that they had grown so wicked he could live with them no longer, and must find another parish!"

The article concludes as follows which certainly does not indicate that all the earnest temperance men are ready to destroy the Republican party:

"Has not the cause of temperance for the last seven years, under this Republican party made a great advance? Will it not that all at once the party is discovered to be unfaithful to the cause. When we came to Aroostook county seven years ago there were but four rum places in full blast in this village. In Houlton there were nobody knows how many. In Mars Hill, Caribou, Ashland, Bridgewater, Fort Fairfield, Oakfield, and all town where liquor was sold, and in some sold and freely drank. It was an every day occurrence to see drunken men in our streets. Now, May 1st it is as unusual as then it was common. Records comparatively none told now to what there was then. The people have at these years been getting educated up to the truth, that we can live and be better off without intoxicating drink than with it. And we think the gentleman would be more? For ourself we want nothing in that direction than to see our beautiful country free from everything which intoxicates!

Winterport and Bucksport.

AN ILLUSTRATION TESTED.

Mr. Editor:—

Sir:—Your correspondent, R. R. proves himself capable of writing on controverted subjects, and it is a real pleasure to deal with such an article as he now gives us. He writes with coolness, with real candor, and with the most exemplary kindness. Though it is not a word of coarseness, or low slang, but much of delicate feeling in the article and in making a brief answer to his position, I will try and imitate, to the best of my ability, all of his rare virtues.

While awarding this just deference, however, to the taste of your correspondent, I cannot equally esteem his argument; for I think his logic is very faulty and consequently inconclusive. His argument, in fact, is based on false premises: his reasoning and his premises do not agree; and therefore, the quod erat demonstrandum—the grand proposition to be found out—by no means follows. The whole of it is a work of fancy. Let me show where.

1. The first applicant for aid—the gentleman from Winterport—does not come out with a proposition to raise by himself and friends, $15,000 for the erection of a house, the cost of which is to be $25,000, and then ask a loan of $10,000. After it is completed. There have been two propositions. The first was to get a loan of $20,000, the second of $15,000—with which to build the house costing $25,000, and the fallacy is, that the house when built will not more than enough, for will it be worth enough in the hands of either mortgagee or mortgagee, to pay six per cent. on the money loaned. The promise is false, and the fabric always falls when the foundations of an argument are not facts.

2. The other applicant—the gentleman from Bucksport—does not come with a proposition to build a house costing $30,000, as compared with the $25,000 house to be built by the contemplation from Winterport. The proposition, as in the other premise, is exactly the reverse. The Bucksport gentleman proposes to build a better house for less money than the Winterport gentleman proposes. The Bucksport house is to cost about one quarter less, and to be worth to Bangor many times more, than the Winterport erection. Here again the premises fails, and the inference of the reasoner, must consequently be a non sequitur—a mere fallacy.

3. Nor does your correspondent state the case according to the facts, when he fancies that the Bucksport gentleman has only imaginary backers, while the gentleman from Winterport has a certainty on his side. He argues the facts in the case are exactly the other way. The Bucksport gentleman asks for, because he needs no backers; for he has all the money he wants for his enterprise in his own coat pocket; and all he desires is time and opportunity to put his hand in and count it out—the gentleman from Winterport, on the other hand, may well talk about his backers; for he has very little money of his own; and he has no stronger and willing friends to help him. His own pocket being nearly empty, he solicits, like many a poor fellow, in his rich relations. He has a wealthy sister living down below in the name of Belfast; but the good lady has put herself under bonds not to help him; and another sister, still further down, by the name of Rockland, has already devoted her last spare dollar to putting up a costly dwelling for herself. His other relations are rather little people; and it is about as much as they can do I mean the excellent Mrs. Hampden, the industrious Mrs. Searsport and the beautiful Mrs. Camden—to get along with the earning of their daily bread. He has proved, and is now demonstrating, the uncertainty of nearly all his resources—or rather the certainty that he expects nothing from them by putting up contribution boxes "all along shore" above his present residence; but now here below it; and he shows the serious futility of even this reliance by sending another up to Boston; where he can expect but little money except on loan, which will have to be secured by a good mortgage taking precedence of any Bangor lien; for the citizens up there are strangers to the Winterport gentleman, and are supposed to know how to handle money. The promise here is therefore false; and the conclusion consequently sophistical—another fallacy.

4. Now in fact, as represented by your correspondent, that Bangor will get both the Bucksport and Winterport boats is imaginary capitalist, R. R. Rideout, builds his money to his Winterport borderer? It will become his interest to give his business to it, so as to make it become his interest from the Bucksport boat to turn it over to the Winterport concern, because he will see that his money is safe. What could the Bucksport affair hope to do with the capital—that is, the business of Bangor—pledged against it? Now, Bucksport is a very shrewd old gentleman. He has got a plenty of money, but nothing, unless he sees before him a Bangor boy. Trust both concerns alike, and then both may be built because the capital and business of Bangor will motivate for helping the one and injuring the other. With this over-hauled treatment—either locating to both the same proportionate amount, or leaving them both to find their capital where they can—and the Bucksport enterprise becomes a certainty at once; and if it be true, as has been published, that Mr. Winterport has "refused six per cent" on the "cash" of his concern "for better terms," he can raise all the money he wants Bangor to loan him in Boston about 4 or 5 per cent. I will not say during the "five days" appointed and advertised for this purpose, but rather in any twenty-four consecutive hours that can be named. By withholding he credit from both alike, the vaunted statement is a fact, Bangor will secure the erection of both of the houses, while by making it to be will get but one.

There is a story, Mr. Editor, in some of our old school books, that Rhetorio one day built up a splendid castle—I suspect it was a castle in the air—when Logic came along and touched the air-built structure with his little finger, when it immediately tumbled down! Your correspondent, R. R., gives us a very good and agreeable idea of the houses. But it is of little order. It will not bear the slightest examination. Yet in venture to give him a rhetorical figure to look at for a single minute. Let the supposed that R. R. is the owner of a factory. It is situated on the outlet of a little lake with not quite water enough to run it as he would like. Now two gentlemen approach him. One says the same moment: "Sir, I am Mr. Winterport, who proposes to cut a canal from this water in margin of the mill-pond, and drain a portion of this supply, for the benefit of other mill-seats lying West and South, on the simple condition that Mr. R. Rideout loan Mr. Winterport the means of doing it. The other is Mr. Bucksport, whose proposition is, that he will cut a canal tapping a long chain of lakes—a hundred and thirty-four miles in length—and pour all their contents into Mr. R. R.'s mill-privilege, provided only that he will not bind him before hand to do Mr. Winterport cut the drain at Mr. R. R.'s expense and Mr. Bucksport asks nothing for his out of kindness. Let it be understood, too, that if Mr. R. R. helps Mr. Winterport cut the top, Mr. Bucksport will not furnish the supply. Now, with this piece of rhetoric before him, what would Mr. R. R.'s own friend do his own best good, do? Agree to get a lease, and make a gain—in any event getting all that Mr. Winterport offers him—and ten-fold more in another way. I can only say that his rhetoric has got the better of his logic, rendering him very much over in his way than the sense of logic.

Bangor.

Letter from Chicago.

CHICAGO, Ill., Aug. 6, 1869.

To the Editor of the Daily Whig:

My peregrinations have again brought me to this place, after an absence of a year. The change since that time is marked.—Large blocks of solid marble, others of the finest stone, and others of brick have made their appearance, and every available sight, and all the work is done in the building these not as formerly of the unsubstantial, slab style, but solid and durable.—Rents almost beyond human conception here, where are now congregated 200,000 souls, was forty years ago a wild, boggy, worthless prairie. History gives no parallel to this.

Business just at present, seems dull here, but it is hardly to be considered when we know that all the [illegible] have been for several weeks [illegible] from pestilence, starvation and fire, while Chicago has suffered nothing of the kind.

I can never cease wondering at the miraculous facilities for [illegible] in Chicago. Many cities labor under the disadvantage that they must stop [illegible] long as possible [illegible] asking it adds to their wealth, but the Chicagoans are not so. [illegible] pass through, [illegible] All of the railroads are connected with one another, and each receive connected with the river, canals and lak [illegible] unloaded from any vessel [illegible] any of the roads; so that a building [illegible] or any of the far [illegible] communication [illegible] by way of the lakes [illegible] great centre of the West and it is [illegible] of the whole country.

The Mississippi valley of the Northwest has been under a dark and wet cloud during a large part of the [illegible] for the month. It has been [illegible] that the wheat crop is abundant in [illegible] too much [illegible] for it [illegible] sions—but the continued [illegible] wet weather ruins it, [illegible] tedious harvesting. The Spring is [illegible] backward, corn has [illegible] very [illegible] before harvest, [illegible] and it will be that the crop [illegible] for want of proper care during [illegible] portion of its growth. A large quantity of hay was left to rot on the ground from the inability of the farmers to gather it [illegible] getting and harvesting [illegible] extremely wet. But [illegible] time, the crop will be good, and the West will enjoy the East with all the [illegible] they need.

RELIGIOUS.

Passing up Michigan avenue [illegible] Sunday since, when near the [illegible] of Madison street, I was attracted by a large [illegible] persons were informed, by [illegible] thereon, was to be dedicated [illegible] had never seen such [illegible] ceremony, except where our Sibley [illegible] first took a [illegible] to Bacchus, at Portland. I went in, and [illegible] the very interesting ceremony [illegible] followed. [illegible] The new Stated Church [illegible] all States, is delightful [illegible] places of worship [illegible] some hundreds of [illegible] within the State without [illegible] to which to hold meetings [illegible] these towns find [illegible] difficult to procure [illegible] occasion which to preach; this was [illegible] the Rev. Winfield Scott, a home missionary under the auspices of the Baptist [illegible] to make an effort to procure a nucleus [illegible] of worship, and the result of the [illegible] was the building of the [illegible] although not in the church of the [illegible] Moses in which [illegible] children of [illegible] burned incense, but [illegible] for King Solomon [illegible] Temple, yet [illegible] simply adapted to the [illegible] to which [illegible] to put. It will [illegible] a thousand persons [illegible] more, is to be accompanied by two [illegible] tents for sleeping and [illegible] of [illegible] and is to have its own [illegible] of [illegible] ance, that of a pair of strong horses [illegible] attention of the missionaries who [illegible] the character is left wholly at the option of the Bishop, he having the privilege of appointing eight men, from among whom the accused may choose five by whom he is to be tried. Accordingly, the Bishop being the accuser, and the question one of conscience, conviction is almost certain; the penalty may be deposition.

At the commencement of the trial, Mr. Cheney raised several objections to the proceedings, all of which were overruled by the court.

Mr. Cheney, finding himself completely in the hands of his accusers, resorted to the civil court, and sued out a writ of injunction, to stay further proceedings. In serving out this writ Mr. Cheney claims that the preliminary proceedings against him were insufficient, and, based on the personal ill will of the bishop, prejudicial to a fair trial, that the appointment of assessors (the members of the court) was unlawful and invalid; that his rights, clearly given to him by law, were disregarded by this lawful and invaded court; that no sufficient charge has been preferred against him; that the members of the court, so called, have confederated together for his injury, and are utterly unfit to sit as his triers.

The case involves the proceedings of the ecclesiastical body, and brought the matter before the Supreme Court of Chicago. Judge Jamieson, who, after argument by the counsel, had the temporary injunction permanent in a decision of great importance, as it defined the [illegible] and power of ecclesiastical courts in America. The decision of the court [illegible] rested avowedly on the action of the Bishop in [illegible] the injunction. It considered that each of the several objections raised by the counsel [illegible] could, and by Rev. unanimity should have been sustained, and were sustained, and were sufficient in law to [illegible] the case out of the church, and restore the [illegible] with it. It regarded as [illegible] the [illegible] in the courts of the land, [illegible] of church tyranny, [illegible] the right to expel any clergyman, [illegible] him on original principles by the [illegible] of the injunction [illegible] and has been affirmed by the Supreme Court of Illinois.

Judge Jamieson himself [illegible] opinion, and other Judges [illegible]

Schenck's Pulmonic Syrup.

Seaweed Tonic and Mandrake Pills will cure Consumption, Liver Complaint and Dyspepsia, if taken according to directions. They are all three to be taken at the same time. They cleanse the stomach, relax the liver and put it to work; then the appetite becomes good; the food digests and makes good blood; the patient begins to grow in flesh; the disease and matter ripens in the lungs, and the patient coughs the disease and all [illegible] with the [illegible] way to our consumption dies.

Dr. Schenck, of Philadelphia, the well known physician, is now at the Continental Hotel, in that city, every Monday, and can be consulted professionally free of charge. He gives his whole attention to diseases of the Throat, Lungs, Liver and Stomach. Those who call on the Doctor should not fail to procure his book entitled "Consumption, Liver Complaint and Dyspepsia, their Nature and Treatment," which will be sent to them free of charge. The price of the book is only 25 cents, but as the Doctor wishes to have it in the hands of every one afflicted with Consumption, Liver Complaint or Dyspepsia, he will send it free to all who write for it. Those who have used Dr. Schenck's Medicines for years, and have been cured by them, will find it to their interest to call on the Doctor when he visits this city, as he will then be able to tell in a few minutes what is the matter with them, free of charge. Dr. Schenck's Pulmonic Syrup is a pleasant medicine to take, and is the great remedy for breaking up a cough, night sweats and all diseases of the throat, and the first step in all cases of Consumption. Dr. Schenck's Seaweed Tonic is a preparation of Iodine, and is the great remedy for purifying the blood, and is the only remedy known that will reach the seat of the disease in Dyspepsia. Dr. Schenck's Mandrake Pills act upon the liver, causing a healthy secretion of bile, and are entirely vegetable. Two or three of these pills will be found sufficient to carry off the worst case of Biliousness. Dr. Schenck's Pulmonic Syrup and Seaweed Tonic are to be taken in connection with the Mandrake Pills in all cases of Consumption, Liver Complaint and Dyspepsia. Two ounces of Seaweed Tonic and three pills are the dose to be taken at first, and after a few days the dose may be increased to three ounces of Tonic and five pills. Dr. Schenck's Pulmonic Syrup is to be taken three times a day, before meals, in doses of from one to two tablespoonfuls, according to the strength of the patient. Directions how to take the medicines accompany each package. Dr. Schenck's Pulmonic Syrup, Seaweed Tonic and Mandrake Pills are prepared only by Dr. J. H. Schenck & Son, Philadelphia, and for sale by druggists everywhere.

Meeting of Citizens of St Louis

ST. LOUIS, Aug. 10.

An enthusiastic meeting of the citizens was held in the City Council Chamber to night, to consider and take action upon the question of removing the national capital to the Mississippi Valley.

Some of the most prominent citizens of St Louis were present.

Speeches were made and resolutions adopted, one of which was—"Resolved, that this meeting favors the calling of a national convention at St Louis, for the purpose of mutual consideration of the subject of the removal of the national capital to the Mississippi Valley by chosen delegates from the States, and by them doing hasten the final settlement of the question."

A committee of five was appointed to which the whole subject should be referred, with authority to make all proper arrangements for the convention.

BALTIMORE, Aug. 10.

The whole of the prisoners who escaped from jail last night were recaptured today, found in their city and the remainder at Carroll County, Md., except Dennis, one of the Harnden express robbers, who is still at large.

Hoffman, the other express robber who escaped last night, was one of the party taken at Union Bridge.

Cuban Affairs

NEW YORK, Aug. 10.

The Herald says the new commander of our fleet on the Cuban station is an earnest sympathizer with the Cuban movement.

The World says Paul S Forbes, of this city, was sent to Madrid by the Administration as a confidential government agent in association with Gen. Sickles, a place for which his former intimacy with Prim especially qualified him.

Full private directions were given to Mr Forbes and formal instructions to Sickles, and both aimed at the single point of delivering to Prim de Spain to concede political power tantamount to the Cubans, on condition of the latter pledging themselves to pay Spain a certain sum of money, to be hereafter guaranteed by the United States.

The plan was heartily approved by Minister Lorque, the Cuban agent in that country. A speech from Washington says Sickles' selection as Secretary Fish thinks his position rejected.

CABLE NEWS

LONDON, August 11. Parliament was prorogued today, by a Royal commission. The following message from the Queen, was read by the Commission.—"We are commanded by the Queen to declare to you, with your entire understanding in Parliament.

Her Majesty remains with pleasure in the possession of the most friendly assurances from foreign powers, and trusts the delays may tend to maintain the relations between the two countries, on a durable basis of friendship.

The Queen has the entire satisfaction in acknowledging the untiring zeal and assiduity with which you have prosecuted the arduous labors of the session, and in supporting on and to the establishment of the Irish Church, you have carefully kept in view considerations, which during the opening of the session were commended to your notice.

It is the hope of the Queen that this important measure may become a permanent settlement of the paramount duty of Parliament to pass a reasonable regard to existing for each of the three Kingdoms, to the special circumstances by which it may be distinguished, and to declare principles of impartial justice with all interests and all portions of the nation. Her Majesty firmly trusts that the act may promote the work of peace in Ireland and help to unite all classes of its people in a fraternal feeling with the English and Scotch fellow-subjects, which, while it must form the chief security for strength in Her Majesty's extended dominions.

The Queen, reminding you of having brought to completion important labors on the subject of prisons and imprisonment for debt to which you have given your close attention, which will be regarded with satisfaction by the working classes and the general public.

The law framed for the better government of the colonial schools of England will render the resources of those establishments more available to the community and more efficient in their important purposes.

In the removal of the duty on corn the Queen sees new evidence of your desire to extend industry and commerce, and enlarge to the utmost means supplies of food which our insular position in a peculiar degree requires.

The Queen trusts that in measures for a more economical management of the real estate by the state may be found to facilitate the great commercial and social objects of a ready and certain conveyance, and give an authority of the system of registration which is passed with such advantage into so many countries of the civilized world.

We are commanded to state that the Queen thanks you for the liberal support which you have granted for the services of the year and for the measures by which you have applied Her Majesty to liquidate charge of the Abyssinian expedition.

From the Galaxy.

THE SHADOW OF FATE.

(Concluded.)

For a short time I lay undecided what to do. Why did the apparently insignificant proceeding of reading and destroying a piece of paper fill me with a suspicion that something was wrong?

Who was this stranger than?

He had learned my name, yet I had not discovered his. There was but one way to satisfy my suspicions. A portion of the paper lay unburnt under the table. Another moment and the fragment was in my hand. Yet how—could I examine it properly without lighting the candle?

Perhaps the moonlight—

I knelt by the window and eagerly scrutinized the paper. One side was blank; the other contained the following: . . . . .

. . . . world, with a hearty laugh, . . . pleasant manners. . . . Here the paper was so blackened that only the following could be discerned: . . . dered . . . supposed . . . Canada . . .

It was the lost letter!

Overcome, I clung to the window: at the same time I heard the driver's voice again. It was thick, and he spoke inarticulately. He was evidently drunk.

"No, sir," he said—"honest man, I mean—mail bags? I know there's a heap of money—"

Somebody, doubtless the landlord, said something which irritated him, for he replied in a loud voice:

"Well, what if I did? He din't a chief! He's a gentleman. He told you to give me as much liquor as I wanted."

There was a slight pause, after which a disturbance seemed to arise.

I caught the words—

"I'll sleep where I am—mail-bag beside me"—then followed a door shutting, the reflection of the light thrown on the courtyard vanished, and all was silent.

I waited a few moments, and then scarcely knowing what I was doing, began dressing. The folly of the proceeding caused me to stop.

"Pshaw," I muttered: "why should I exaggerate the danger?"

I was about to throw myself on the bed again when the stranger tossed restlessly, and then spoke. Had a thunderbolt entered the room, it could not have had as much effect upon me as his words.

"Perhaps," the man muttered, "Ostch me, indeed? . . . Description . . . Murdered George Herbert! Well—what if I did? Struck me! . . . Life, life, life! O Heaven! . . . He turned over with a groan, and, after murmuring indistinctly, relapsed into silence.

The blood rushed to my brain, and I thought I would stifle.

Gracious Heaven! the murderer of George lay before me!

I was alone, at midnight, in the room with a criminal escaping from justice!

I was unarmed. What should I do?

Quickly and silently I approached the chair on which he had thrown his coat.

Yes! as I suspected, I found a pistol. I was armed now, and did not fear him.

I would descend, arouse the landlord, tell him all; the assassin would be captured and George avenged.

Yet to reach the door, I must pass his cot. What if he should wake? Even while murmuring those words I heard a movement from his bed. Instantly I shrank back to my cot.

The man rose stealthily. What was he about to do? Would he murder me? Had he seen me take the pistol from his coat? If so, there was but one course.

Grasping the weapon, I lay watching his movements.

He dressed partially, and advancing to the centre of the room, paused and seemed to listen. I breathed with the regularity of a sleeper. He appeared satisfied and moved to the door.

Instantly his intention flashed across my mind. He was about to murder Mrs. Herbert!

He opened the door and passed out, closing it after him. I crept from the cot, and had almost reached the door when I heard a sound which chilled the blood in my veins.

He had locked the door!

There was not a moment to be lost. I must escape from the apartment. The only means of egress was the window. To leap from it to the ground might be fatal? What should I do? With a rope I could easily descend. The bed-sheets would make me one. With the strength of despair I tore them into strips, and, as fast as my trembling hands would allow me, fastened them together, and tied the rope thus formed to the heavy bureau. A cold perspiration stood upon my forehead, and I breathed like a cat. 'God grant that I may be in time!' I whispered, and clinging to the rope, I slid noiselessly into the courtyard.

The window of the room beneath was open, and the room bright with the moonlight. I looked in. Lying on the floor was the body of a man. It was the driver, drunk, the mail-bag and an overturned bottle by his side. It would be impossible to rouse him.

I climbed in and glided toward the half-open door which led to the jewelry, but had scarcely crossed the room when I heard the breathing of some one approaching.

I shrank into the shadow, clenching the pistol, and beheld the stranger enter.

He advanced to the driver, laughing softly, and seemed to assure himself that the man slept. An instant afterward he held something up in the moonlight. It was a key.

Rapidly he opened the bag, picked out letter after letter; at last he came to one which he tore open. There was money in it; another, more money, which he crammed into his pocket. Suddenly he paused—for a moment remained motionless, and then approached the door in the shadow of which I was concealed, and closed it.

The moonlight fell upon me. The man recoiled. I raised the pistol and pointed it at him.

'You are my prisoner,' I whispered.

He drew a knife.

'I mean to kill you,' he hissed.

'May God forgive you!' I said: 'your last moment has come.'

I pulled the trigger; the pistol did not fire. The man laugh.

'Fool!' he said. 'You've taken my pistol. Now receive your reward!'

The knife glittered wickedly in the moonlight as he crept toward me. With a wild cry of anguish I unconsciously put one hand behind me. It touched something; I gave a scream of triumph. My hand was on the bell-rope!

'Back, villian!' I cried—'back! You are in my power!'

And with superhuman strength I pulled the cord. Instantly the bell in the cupola pealed forth wildly. Clang, clang, clang it went, clear and sharp in the stillness of the night.

The man seemed paralyzed.

'Murderer of George Herbert,' I said, 'hear your death-knell!'

Clang, clang, clang went the bell.

Speechless, the man glared at me like a baited tiger.

Clang, clang, clang!

Clang, clang, clang!

Clang, clang, clang!

Without a word, with knife raised, he sprang at me!

I caught the weapon as it descended, and closed with him in the struggle of life or death. He was much stronger than myself, but in the supreme moment I seemed to be endowed with more than natural strength.

'Help! help!' I called.

I heard the sound of hurrying footsteps.

'Help! help! help!'

I clung to him with desperate tenacity, but my strength was beginning to give way.

He will kill me, I thought. They will not come in time.

With a rapid movement he caught me in his arms and bore me to the floor. Not a sound was uttered, but as I looked into his eyes and saw his lips writhing into a clevilish smile, I felt that my last moment had come. My strength departed—my brain reeled.—I beheld the knife uplifted—when the report of a pistol shook the room, and my opponent, with a cry, relaxed his hold and fell heavily to the floor.

I turned and beheld the driver—he who had driven the hearse which contained the body of George Herbert to the grave—with the pistol in his hand. In the ghastly moonlight, to my excited imagination he seemed like Death the Avenger.

At the same instant the door flew open, and the landlord, followed by the people of the household, entered with lights.

'What is this?' he cried, beholding the body lying on the floor.

The murderer of George Herbert!

Mrs. Herbert stood within the door. She advanced slowly into the apartment.

'Is he dead?' she asked calmly.

The man raised himself with a violent effort, his fast glazing eyes endeavored to fix themselves upon the wife of his victim, his clenched hand went up agonizingly, a treaty, and he made an awful effort to speak:

'God—'

A shudder passed over him and he fell back dead.

'Kneel,' said Mrs. Herbert, her eyes filling with tears for her murdered husband, filling with divine pity—'kneel with me, and pray that his sinful soul may be forgiven.'

We knelt, when my eyes, as if obeying an invisible mandate, fell upon the hand of the corpse, which lay upon a half-opened paper, the index finger pointing. A thrill of superstitious terror crept over me, for I read—

'At the same time the hearse arrived, the body of the unfortunate man . . . .

American & Foreign Patents

R. H. EDDY,

SOLICITOR OF PATENTS,

Late Agent of the U. S. Patent Office, Washington, D. C.

No. 78 State Street, (opposite Kendall House,) Boston, Mass.

Mr. EDDY, a practical mechanic, and for a number of years, a Principal Examiner in the United States Patent Office, continues to prepare Patents and procure them in the United States and in all foreign countries. Caveats, Specifications, Assignments, and all papers for Patents, executed on reasonable terms. Prompt attention given to the rejection of applications, and all business before the Patent Office promptly attended to. Researches made into the novelty of inventions, and opinions rendered in all matters touching the validity of the claims of any patent upon which there may be a question. Models forwarded by express, or otherwise. No Agency in the United States possesses superior facilities for obtaining Patents, or for the faithful prosecution of applications.

During eight months' actual experience in this city, Mr. EDDY has had the management of nearly all the important cases before the Patent Office, and has been unusually successful in obtaining Patents. Many cases which had been rejected by other Agents, after personal interviews with the Commissioner and Examiners, have been allowed on the presentation of new drawings or specifications prepared by Mr. EDDY. In numerous instances, inventors, after employing other Agents, have come to Mr. EDDY, and by his superior skill and experience have obtained their Patents in a few weeks, when others had failed for years. Many cases have been successfully managed by Mr. EDDY, which were pronounced unpatentable by other Agents.

Mr. EDDY has made preparations, in all but one of the cases which have been examined, and that one will be completed in a few days. This fact leads me to recommend those who desire to procure their patents, to apply to him, as they may be sure of having the money refunded which is allowed on their cases, and of receiving able and faithful services.

TESTIMONIAL.

I regard Mr. Eddy as the most successful practitioner with whom I have had intercourse.

CHARLES MASON,

Commissioner of Patents.

I have no hesitation in saying that they can not employ a more capable and reliable person, and one more competent to secure for inventors early and favorable considerations of their claims.

EDMUND BURKE,

Late Commissioner of Patents.

Mr. R. H. Eddy has made favorable applications, in all but one of the cases which have been examined, and that one will be completed in a few days. This fact leads me to recommend those who desire to procure their patents, to apply to him, as they may be sure of having the money refunded which is allowed on their cases, and of receiving able and faithful services.
